This methodology is based on maintaining an up-to-date database of all presently authorized users in the band including, obviously, the call boxes on these frequencies. This database is "searched" for each venue to identify nearby users and to make several tentative frequency selections. When necessary, licensees are contacted to verify operational particulars. Consideration is also made of TV Channel 4/5 utilization in the area; use of frequencies close to 75 MHz is avoided if the venue is near an Instrument Landing System localizer course. Prior to each event, a technician performs a monitoring sweep of the selected frequencies to verify non-use by other parties, which includes monitoring of adjacent channels. A final frequency selection is then made. As previously noted, this procedure has worked flawlessly to date.

Conclusion

In sum, it is my opinion that a system with the facilities described would perform well from a technical standpoint. The spectators would receive acceptable signal quality in the transmission of event-related information. Further, the specially-designed receivers can be produced, will work well, and can be offered at a cost which make it commercially feasible to distribute them as planned.
